WRITE FOR THE FILMS!

SEE OVER

THE SHORT-STORY WRITER • THE NOVELIST • THE PLAYWRIGHT • THE POET • THE JOURNALIST

and all who wish to add the extremely profitable film market to their other literary outlets will find this book not only an invaluable guide and help, but enthrallingly interesting. Fully illustrated with many plates and diagrams. It also includes reproductions of actual scripts. The author dissects and analyses them, shows their construction, explains their features and exposes their composition. This is a book that should have its place in every author's library.

LEGAL INFORMATION

By F. H. Cowper, Barrister-at-Law

AGREEMENTS BETWEEN AUTHOR AND PUBLISHER

THE first thing to be said about agreements between authors and publishers is that the drafting of them is a task best left alone by the The great publishing houses have their own competently composed forms of agreement. They are well aware that one of the most fruitful sources of litigation is the pardonable belief of plain business men that they are perfectly capable of expressing their meaning in a few wellchosen words without a lot of legal rigmarole; hence omissions, ambiguities and misunderstandings. The "gentleman's agreement" is another well-worn path to the High Court and the County Court. In the courtship period of negotiation there is a facile charm in its loosely defined relationships, which is, however, hardly equal to the strain of the ultimately inevitable assertion of actual rights and liabilities. Still, if you are bent on negotiating and formulating your own agreement, remember that you face all the privileges and perils of freedom of contract, which imports an adult responsibility for your own actions. If thoughtlessly or absent-mindedly you agree to something which second thoughts or maturer reflections subsequently regret, the law, generally speaking, is not going to play nursemaid and tidy up after you to frame what you may think would be a better and fairer contract. Therefore, just as the publisher takes competent advice in drawing his contracts, the wise author will seek the services of a reliable literary agent, who will have a common interest with him in not carelessly surrendering valuable rights.

Still, agent or no agent, as an author you ought to be able to understand the terms of your own contract. When it is put before you what ought you to look out for? First, make up your mind clearly what you mean to agree to and be sure that as many difficulties as possible are foreseen and solved. You have composed—or intend to compose—a literary work. First of all, do you mean to assign the copyright out and out? (The assignment, by the way, must be in writing and signed by you.) Such a step will deprive you of all future control over the handling of your work, but you may be prepared for that. Well, do you want to be paid a lump sum or royalties? Before agreeing with a publisher to take royalties in exchange for an assignment of copyright, remember you may not always be dealing with him. If he sells the copyright to someone else there will be legal obstacles in the way of enforcing a right to royalties against a purchaser who, of course, was not a party to the deed of assignment. Again, if the publisher is a limited company and goes into liquidation more serious difficulties will arise. The best way is not to part with the copyright at all if you can help it but to give the publisher a sole and exclusive right to publish the work and then you can safely accept remuneration on a royalty basis, calculated at so much a copy sold, or else in relation to trade or retail prices; different royalties may, of course, be stipulated for in respect of sales in different parts of the world. Very well, then, if it is a sole and exclusive licence that you are granting, ensure the use of words which make it clear. Don't tolerate ambiguous phrases which might leave it in doubt whether there may, after all, be an assignment of copyright.

Now think a little further. Do you mean this sole and exclusive right to be perpetual and universal? Probably not. Then see that the intended limitations are accurately defined. Is there a limitation of time? Then for how long? Or will you approach the matter in another way and limit the right to, say, one edition? Or do you prefer to leave this aspect of the matter indefinite but to reserve a right of revocation? If so, look to the proper expression of the terms on which the revocation is to be effected, length of notice, and so on. In vague and ill-drawn agreements these things are often left in the air, and when a difference of opinion arises the courts have to try to puzzle out by inference what the parties ought to have expressed themselves.

Now, what about limitations of place? Is the right of publishing to be confined to Great Britain or to the United Kingdom or to the British Commonwealth? Have you thought about the American rights? You must be careful about that, for the law of the United States makes it all too easy to lose your copyright there. Your agreement should make proper provision for the duty of securing it.

Remember always that you are not merely concerned with the work in its present form. All sorts of rights spring out of it—serial and translation rights, as well as rights of filming, dramatisation, broadcasting and even Braille. All these are the author's, to be dealt with or disposed of by him, and he must see to it that no unwary expression deprives him of them.

There are other details which both the parties would do well to consider. It may well be to the author's advantage to stipulate at what price the work is to be sold. The publisher who has been granted a licence to publish a work may be well advised to impose terms on the author limiting the extent of his right to assign the copyright over his head to someone else or restraining him from using substantial portions of the book as newspaper articles. the publisher has been given an option to publish later editions on the same terms other questions will arise. Suppose he refuses to bring out a new edition when the author wants one; provision must be made for that situation. Another important point, for the author's protection, is to restrain the publisher from making alterations or additions to the text without his consent. It is also worth stipulating that the work shall be published in the author's name. The prudent author will likewise insist on a clause whereby the licence is unconditionally terminated on the bankruptcy of the publisher or the liquidation of the publishing company. The publisher, on his part, may properly require a guarantee that the work is not a violation of any existing copyright and that it contains no libellous matter and a covenant by the author to indemnify him against any claims under these heads. In the case of a technical work periodical revision will be necessary. What if the author neglects to revise it when called on? Doubtless the publisher will want to be granted the right to have the revision done by some competent person and to deduct the cost from the author's royalties.

There are innumerable details to be settled. How long is the work to be? When must the manuscript be delivered? What is the period within which the publisher must bring out the work? How much time will the author have to correct the proofs? What latitude will he have to make alterations in the proofs apart from correcting printers' errors? Is he to be paid any sum as an advance on royalties and when? How many presentation copies is he to receive and what rebate is he to be allowed on copies which he may purchase himself? On what date is the publisher to deliver the author his annual account of sales? Think of all the points, but when one has foreseen everything there is still something to foresee. Differences may arise between the parties and, in case they do, it is usual to agree that these will be settled by arbitration under the Arbitration Act, 1889.

Finally, so far we have dealt with the matter on the basis that no difficulty arises as to the actual existence of the work. But suppose an author fails to produce a book he has agreed to write? Well, the court will not grant an order for specific performance to compel him to do so, but it will award damages against him for the breach. And if the intending author dies with his contract unfulfilled? His executors are under no liability.

One last word of warning, by way of postscript, for the inexperienced author: Beware of the contract under which your work is to be published at your own expense. In the case, say, of a family memoir for private circulation that will, of course, be reasonable, but otherwise, if the publisher has not got sufficient confidence in the work to back it himself, this is generally a costly way for an author to learn that his writing is without a popular appeal.

COPYRIGHT

*HE first recorded copyright action in these islands must surely be that in the court of the High King at Tara between those two scholars and bibliophiles, both afterwards saints, Finnen of Moville, and Columba, his former pupil. Columba had secretly copied a valuable manuscript belonging to his old master, who recovered judgment against him, with an order for the delivery up of the infringing copy, for, ran the decision, to every cow its calf and to every book its copy. That was in sixth-century Ireland, and over a thousand years later Dr. Johnson used the same metaphor. Boswell had suggested "that if a man could get a work by heart he might print it . . . Johnson: 'No, sir, a man's repeating it no more makes it his property than a man may sell a cow which he drives home.' I said printing an abridgement of a work was allowed, which was only cutting the horns and tail off the cow. Johnson: 'No, sir, 'tis making the cow have a calf.'" once put the basic idea of copyright in a nutshell: "There seems to be in authors a stronger right of property than that by occupancy, a metaphysical right, a right, as it were, of creation, which should from its nature be perpetual; but the consent of nations is against it and, indeed, reason and the interests of learning are against it . . . For the general good of the world, therefore, whatever valuable work has once been created by an author and issued out by him should be understood as no longer in his power but as belonging to the public; at the same time the author is entitled to an adequate reward. This he should have by an exclusive right to his work for a considerable number of years." Since then the Copyright Act, 1911, has given form and substance to the conception of literary and artistic property, providing a complete code of this branch of the law, which the interpretations of the judges can clarify but cannot contradict. To turn to the Act, then, is the shortest cut to a general view of the law. The Act is primarily concerned with Imperial copyright, that is copyright within "the parts of His Majesty's Dominions to which this Act applies." For practical purposes this may be said to include all British territories—self-governing Dominions, colonies and protectorates—though local legislation, particularly in Canada, has produced distinctive variations on the theme.

Well, what does the Act do? It protects copyright "in every original literary, dramatic, musical and artistic work," either if the work has been published in British territory or, in the case of an unpublished work, if, at the time of the making of it, the author was a British subject or was resident within British territory. You must be careful not to understand such words as "original," "literary" or "artistic" in the ordinary sense. In the Act the word "literary" will cover work which has not the smallest literary pretensions, and "artistic" is similarly wide enough to cover a mere commercial design. As for "original," that, of course, does not necessarily imply the exercise of any imaginative or inventive faculty. The Act protects, not ideas, but skill and labour in execution, so that a set of mathematical tables, provided the author has worked them out for himself, will apparently come within its scope and so will a journalist's own report or version of a speech, though, of course, in the speech itself, he secures no copyright. Compilations, such as a directory, a trade advertisement, an alphabetical list of the stations in Bradshaw's railway guide or an arrangement of broadcasting programmes, have been afforded protection, but, on the other hand, in the case of a collection of miscellaneous information reproduced at the beginning of a pocket diary, it has been held that the selection did not satisfy the requirements of an original literary work. So also an advertisement slogan (e.g. "Beauty is a social necessity, not a luxury") has been held not protected on the grounds of triviality, but a slogan or other advertising matter which was not open to the same objection might be protected. The quality of originality is more evident in the instance of a particular production of a play, say one of Shakespeare's, which has become common property. Such a production would be protected and the same would be true of a new arrangement or adaptation, say, of Purcell's music.

Next, what is copyright? The bundle of rights wrapped up in that term are quite clearly summed up in the Act. It means "the sole right to produce or reproduce the work or any substantial part thereof in any material form whatsoever, to perform, or in the case of a lecture, to deliver, the work or any substantial part thereof in public; if the work is unpublished, to publish any substantial part thereof." It includes the sole right "(a) to produce, reproduce, perform or publish any translation of the work; (b) in the case of a dramatic work, to convert it into a novel or other non-dramatic work; (c) in the case of a novel or other non-dramatic work, or of an artistic work, to convert it into a dramatic work, by way of performance in public or otherwise; (d) in the case of a literary, dramatic, or musical work, to make any record, perforated roll, cinematograph film or other contrivance by means of which the work may be mechanically performed or delivered, and to authorise any such acts as aforesaid." Of course, even this comprehensive statement allows of difficulties of interpretation. What, for instance, is "any substantial part"? Value and not mere extent or amount is the test, so that any reproduction which perceptibly diminished the value of the original would constitute infringement. Again, what is a "performance in public"? Clearly a performance among friends in a private house does not violate an author's monopoly, but beyond that one is in debatable territory. Profit is not an essential element of public performance but it is one to be taken into account, as also is the number of persons present. It has been held that the use of loudspeakers in an hotel to make a broadcast programme audible to its guests constitutes a public performance in the hotel; whilst a performance in public has been held to have taken place at a private dinner and dance club to which guests were invited.

Another important question is: What constitutes publication? It is important because, from the prerequisites prescribed for protection, it is clear that, on the one hand, an unpublished work by a foreigner may, on publication in England, become a copyright work, while, on the other hand the work of a British subject may lose its copyright by being first published abroad. The Act lays it down that publication "means the issue of copies of the work to the public and does not include the performance in public of a dramatic or musical work, the delivery in public of a lecture, the exhibition in public of an artistic work on the construction of an architectural work of art." Hence it follows that there can be no publication merely by word of mouth or by the issue of a single copy, and that issue for private circulation is not enough. A letter sent to a friend is not published for copyright purposes; a letter sent to a newspaper and printed is so published. (Of letters it may be said in general that to the recipient belongs the actual material substance, which he may keep or sell or destroy but that to the writer belongs the copyright.) As for the case of a work of which copies cannot be issued, there may arise certain hardships. For example, a building erected in England by a foreign architect not resident in British territory would not enjoy copyright protection.

Copyright is infringed by doing, without the consent of the owner of the copyright, any of the things the sole right to do which is by the Act conferred on him. Anyone who knowingly sells, hires, distributes, exhibits in public or imports any work which infringes copyright is also guilty of infringement. The owner may assign his copyright either wholly or partially and may grant any interest in it by licence, but any such dealings must be in writing signed by him or by his duly authorised agent. Infringement of copyright may be restrained, even though no damage is shown. Copies of a work and colourable imitations come within the scope of infringement. A copy has been said to be "that which comes so near the original as to suggest the original to the mind of every person seeing the copy and knowing the original." A news agency has been held to have a right of property at common law in the information it purchased and to be entitled to restrain an infringement of that right by one who surreptitiously obtained the information and published it.

In general, the author of a work is the first owner of the copyright in it but this is subject to exceptions. In the case of an engraving, photograph or portrait executed on commission, the person who ordered it is, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, the owner of the copyright. This is also the case when the author is, under a contract of service or apprenticeship, in the employment of some other person and the work was made in the course of his employment. In an action for infringement, when the defendant puts in issue either the existence of the copyright or the title of the plaintiff, then if a name purporting to be that of the author was indicated on the work in the usual way he is presumed to be the author unless the contrary is proved; if no name was so indicated, or if the name indicated was not his true name or that by which he was commonly known, but the name of the publisher was indicated on the work in the usual way, then that person is presumed, unless the contrary is proved, to be the owner of the copyright for the purposes of the proceedings.

Copyright exists for the life of the author and fifty years after his death, being treated in all respects as part of his estate just as any other of his possessions, but twenty-five years after his death the copyright is not to be deemed to be infringed by reproduction of a work for sale if the person reproducing it gives proper notice of his intention to do so and pays the copyright owner a ten per cent royalty on the published price in respect of all copies of the work sold. In the case of records and the like and of photographs, the copyright term is fifty years from the making of the original plate or negative.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT

INTERNATIONAL copyright depends on no unified system of law or universally accepted principle. Each country has gone its own way and it is only by a gradual process of compromise expressed in a network of separate treaties and conventions that any degree of regulation has been attained. The Berne Convention of 1887 marked the beginning. For practical purposes one may look for the main framework of what has been achieved in the articles agreed to at the Rome Convention of 1928, amending the provisions of the earlier Berlin Convention of 1908. But first, by what authority do British representatives participate in these arrangements? This brings us back to the Copyright Act, 1911, which authorises the application of the Act by Order in Council to works published in a foreign country, as if they had been first published in British territory, and also to literary, dramatic, musical and artistic works, the authors of which were at the time of the making of them citizens of a foreign country, as if they were British subjects; the Act may also be applied in respect of residence in a foreign country as if it were residence in British territory. But first, before such an Order in Council can be made in respect of any foreign country, that country must have undertaken to make proper provision for the protection of works entitled to copyright under the British Act. Such an Order in Council covers British colonies; as for self-governing Dominions, the Governor in Council is authorised to make similar Orders. The effect of the negotiations between the countries which have agreed to work together in this matter has been to form a union for copyright purposes. The provisions of the Rome Convention cover a field of literary and artistic activity ranging from lectures and sermons to ballets and mimes "the acting form of which is fixed in writing or otherwise"; it embraces productions as various as sculpture, photographs and geographical charts, as well as translations, adaptations and musical arrangements. Works of art applied to industrial processes are to be protected so far as the domestic legislation of each country allows. Public speeches and speeches delivered in the course of legal proceedings may be excluded from copyright protection by the domestic legislation of any country within the copyright union. The right of fixing the conditions under which lectures, addresses and sermons may be reproduced in the press is also reserved for the domestic legislation of each individual country. The basic principles of the Convention are summarised in three of the articles as follows: "Authors who are nationals of any of the countries of the union shall enjoy in countries other than the country of origin of the work, for their works, whether unpublished or first published in a country of the union, the rights which the respective laws do now or may hereafter grant to natives, as well as the rights specially granted by the present Convention." "Authors who are nationals of one of the countries of the union and who first publish their works in another country of the union shall have in the latter country the same rights as native authors." "Authors who are not nationals of one of the countries of the union, and who first publish their works in one of those countries, shall enjoy in that country the same rights as native authors, and in other countries of the union the rights granted by the present Convention. Nevertheless, where any country outside the union fails to protect in an adequate manner the works of authors who are nationals of one of the countries of the union the latter country may restrict the protection given to the works of authors who are at the date of the first publication thereof nationals of the other country and are not effectively domiciled in one of the countries of the union." Thus a citizen of any country of the union enjoys national protection in each of the countries of the union for his unpublished works, as well as for works published in any country of the union; in general he loses all protection for any work which he first publishes in a country outside the union. The unpublished works of a citizen of a country outside the union enjoy no protection, but his work first published in a country within the union is protected, subject to the possibility of the use of the weapon placed in the hands of any country within the union enabling it to take retaliatory measures against a country outside it, if its own authors are inadequately protected there. To sum up, therefore, the first questions to be asked, when a matter of this sort is being considered, are: (1) Is the work published or unpublished? (2) If the latter, what is the nationality of the author? (3) If the former, what is the nationality of the work? Thus in the case of international, as in that of domestic copyright, the question of publication is of prime importance. In laying down what constitutes publication the Convention follows much the same lines as the English Copyright Act, defining "published works" as "works, copies of which have been issued to the public" and stating explicitly that "the representation of a dramatic work, the performance of a musical work, the exhibition of a work of art and the construction of a work of architecture do not constitute publication." As for the period of protection, this is laid down by the Convention as including the life of the author and fifty years after his death, but account is taken of the fact that the domestic laws of different countries differ widely in this matter: in Spain the term is much longer, in Sweden shorter. Accordingly, the Convention lays it down that the term shall be limited by the law of the country where protection is claimed and must not exceed the term fixed in the country of origin of the work.

In general, the working out of the copyright union was a European affair, though countries as far afield as Brazil on the one hand and Japan on the other adhered to the Convention. Russia did not adhere, nor did China or the greater number of the Latin American countries. From the point of view of the British author, the fly, or perhaps one should say, the elephant, in the ointment was the non-adherence of the United States which made no provision for international copyright, only according protection to foreigners in certain circumstances. This has left the field open to wholesale literary piracy beyond the Atlantic. Charles Dickens and Gilbert and Sullivan came up against it. Norman Douglas in the preface to one of the editions of "South Wind "has complained bitterly of the losses he has sustained by unauthorised publication in the States. Any successful work on any subject stands in like peril. Lord Justice Fry, referring to his classic treatise on Specific Performance, noted that " at least one or two American writers have paid me the compliment of embodying my work in theirs, including my mistakes, without any acknowledgment other than an occasional reference to my book." A resident alien domiciled in the United States may enjoy copyright protection there but, apart from such a case, the first requisite is to be a citizen of one of those countries designated by presidential proclamation as eligible to acquire that protection; British citizens are of the number. Next, the work must be first published in the States or at least published simultaneously there and in a foreign country. Finally, the conditions required of United States citizens must be fulfilled by alien authors too. Publication must be "with the notice of copyright affixed to each copy published or offered for sale in the United States." There is provision for the deposit at the Copyright Office of complete copies of the work. There must be due application for registration and payment of a fee. The most onerous requirement is that printed books, except the original text of foreign books not written in English, must be "printed from type set within the limits of the United States . . . or from plates made within the limits of the United States from type set therein, or if the text is reproduced by lithographic process or photo-engraving, then by a process wholly performed within the limits of the United States, and the printing of the texts and the binding of the said books shall be performed within the limits of the United States." British publishers have been obliged to take special measures to comply with these conditions.

LIBEL

RGLISH law makes it pretty dangerous to publish anything imputing criminal, immoral or dishonourable conduct to another or exposing him to hatred, ridicule or contempt. This is defamation—in essence an attack on reputation, the wrong done by him "who filches from me my good name" as opposed to the thief who steals my purse or otherwise inflicts a "property" injury on me. The author or journalist need not trouble himself about the distinction between libel and slander—libel, the defamatory imputation written, pictured, filmed or otherwise recorded; slander, the defamatory imputation by word of mouth, by gesture or by look and therefore transitory. The nearest his profession might bring him to slander would be broadcasting or lecturing, but in those cases there would normally be a written script or a recording or both, and so anything defamatory would be libel after all. Well, what can happen to the man who is guilty of a libel? If the person aggrieved brings an action against him, he can be ordered to pay damages, sometimes enormous damages. (A Russian Princess once recovered £25,000 from a film company.) If he is prosecuted for criminal libel he can be fined or sent to prison. Throughout it must be remembered that there is, properly speaking, no such thing as a press law in England. So, in the matter of libel, the author and the journalist are in general in just the same position as any other citizen.

Now, first take the libels which may render the persons responsible liable in damages. To begin with, if it can be proved that the words complained of are true in substance and in fact, that is a complete defence. On the other hand, if they are not true, it is no defence to show that they were published honestly and without malice; that will avail at best to reduce the amount of damages awarded. Nor is it any defence that the person aggrieved has suffered no ascertainable material loss in consequence. Of course, it is not every defamatory statement that makes a brutal, bludgeoning accusation. A meaning may be conveyed ironically or otherwise indirectly just as effectively and surely; therefore the law takes account of innuendoes. Particular circumstances may render otherwise innocent words highly defamatory, though in any event it must first be determined whether the words in question are capable of bearing a defamatory meaning, after which it must be determined whether in fact they do so. The test to be applied is: What meaning would the words convey to men of reasonable intelligence? If, judged by that standard, they are libellous it matters not that, read another way, they might be capable of another construction. Sometimes, to establish that an expression is defamatory, evidence may have to be produced as to the particular meaning of a slang term. Again, a special background or connection will give words a special colour or importance. Thus, generally speaking, there is nothing libellous in saying that a man advertises or that he owns a patent medicine, but it would be libellous if said of a doctor. Or take another connection and a subtler form of libel; it would be defamatory to append the name of an eminent author to an inferior work, so as to suggest that his capacity had deteriorated. Thus not only personal but professional and trading reputation is protected by the law, though sometimes, in the case of a trader, it may be hard to draw the line between an attack on his reputation and a mere unjustified criticism of his goods, not involving his reputation; not that the latter can be made with impunity, though for this, which is classed as "injurious falsehood," as distinct from libel, it is less easy to recover damages. For that one must show not only that the statement is false but also that it was made maliciously (that is, in the legal sense, with some improper motive) and that it has caused actual ascertainable damage to the person aggrieved. To illustrate the difference between the two sorts of wrong: it is a libel to say that a journal publishes indecent matter; it is an injurious falsehood to say that its circulation is 5,000 when it is really 50,000.

One libel case every journalist has heard of—the Artemus Jones decision. Someone wrote a fanciful article about "goings on" at a French seaside resort, imagined he had invented an improbable sort of name for his principal character and found that it really did belong to a highly respectable barrister, afterwards a County Court judge. The barrister was able to show that people who knew him thought that he was the person referred to and he recovered £1,750 damages. In such a case the question is not: "Who is meant?" but "Who is hit?" For writers this is, of course, a serious danger, but it is not enough for a man to show he has the same name as some fictitious character; he must also show that others took what was written to refer to him, and it must be accepted by the court that reasonable people would do so. Defamatory statements about a class of persons (e.g. Roman Catholics or lawyers) cannot give any member of that class a cause of action merely as a member of it, but if the words point to any particular person, he, of course, can sue. Naturally, the smaller the class (e.g. the clergy of a particular town) the more likely it is that some individual or individuals can be identified. An action for libel is a personal action and if a plaintiff dies before recovering a verdict his right dies with him. It is well known that no one can sue in respect of a libel on the dead but it has been known for a relative of the deceased to proclaim the author a liar in terms sufficiently severe to compel him to take the offensive and himself sue for libel to defend his reputation for veracity.

Anyone who has published a libel may be sued for damages and for this purpose publication simply means communicating it to someone else; so that author, editor, printer, publisher, proprietor and even, in some cases, distributor are all in the same boat. This gives the person libelled in a newspaper a wide choice of possible defendants to any action he may bring and, in this connection, the editor is not bound to disclose the name of his contributor nor to produce the manuscript for inspection. Distributors and newsvendors will not be held liable if they can show that they did not know and had no reason to suspect that the publication they passed on contained a libel.

As regards defences, the best and most complete defence is to show that what was published was true—all of what was published, not just a part. Accordingly, anyone bent on making sensational disclosures is well advised to say no more than can be established, if challenged, by legally admissible evidence, and not, for example, to start with an exaggerated headline which goes beyond the text. In this connection, it is highly dangerous to embark on a general attack on a person's character. If you want to call a man "a libellous journalist" you must have more material than the fact that he has had to pay damages for a libel twenty years ago. "Privilege" is another defence. So far as the journalist is concerned, this means that if in reporting judicial or Parliamentary proceedings or public meetings he publishes a defamatory statement he is not liable for damages unless malice on his part can be established, malice, of course, in the legal sense. The report need not be full but it must be fair and accurate. A report of blasphemous or indecent matter is not privileged. In the case of a public meeting, defamatory matter, in order to come within the scope of privilege, must be actually connected with the object of the meeting and not mere interjection. Another ground of privilege is fair comment on a matter of public interest, published without malice. Such matters embrace affairs of Church and State and local government, the administration of justice, literary, artistic and dramatic criticism and the conduct of public men in so far as it affects their public importance; in general, this does not include their private life, but in the case of, say, a Member of Parliament it might include some aspects of it. It is comment, by the way, that is privileged not a statement of fact; once make a statement of fact and you must be prepared to prove it true. A man cannot invent false "facts" and then base "fair comment" on them. As to the standard of fairness, the measure, as so often in English law, is the ordinary, fairminded, reasonable man, what he would regard as fair.

Now, as to criminal libel, the basis of a prosecution is the public interest. In many respects it covers a wider field than the class of libel for which damages can be awarded but in practice criminal prosecutions are rarer than civil actions. A libel is a crime if it is likely to cause a breach of the peace or if it solicits others to commit a crime. It is a crime to libel members of a particular class so as to stir up hatred against them. It is a crime to libel the dead so as to bring contempt on their surviving relatives, thereby endangering the peace. It is a crime to publish blasphemous or obscene or seditious libels, that is libels on the Sovereign, the government, Parliament or the judges. It is particularly to be noted that truth alone is not a defence to a prosecution; it must, further, be proved to have been for the public benefit that the words should be published. The defences of privilege and fair comment are also available.

OBSCENE LIBEL

T is a criminal offence to publish obscene or immoral words or pictures. Well, then, what is obscenity? At various times judges have defined it in general terms. It is that which tends to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to immoral influences. It is the suggestion of impure and lustful ideas offensive to modesty and decency. In 1727 Lord Chief Justice Raymond, dealing with an obscene libel entitled "The Nun in her Smock," said that " if it reflects on religion, virtue or morality; if it tends to disturb the civil order of society" it is an offence. The nearest thing to a synonym would probably be pornography or salaciousness, but the stress is on the tendency to deprave and corrupt and if it can be shown that the publication of what would otherwise be an obscene libel is necessary or advantageous to religion, science, literature or art, there you have a good defence, provided the matter published does not go beyond what the public good requires. More explicitly than this it is very hard to lay down rules for the practical guidance of authors, artists or publishers. It is possible to mark out the limits of the minefield but not to say with certainty at what precise point one who strays into the danger zone will actually be blown up by a prosecution. The position is much the same as in the case of sedition; the authorities will hardly prosecute if there is no reasonable possibility of securing a conviction from the jury, and, in the case of obscenty, whether or not a jury will find that a particular publication tends to deprave or corrupt will, of course, depend on the standards of morality popularly accepted at any given time. A modern jury might well refuse to convict where a Victorian jury would have convicted without hesitation. Even when a common religious bond gave distinctness to society's conception of morality, custom allowed a wide scope of expression in literature and the arts and when no such common bond exists the idea of morality and even of decency loses its distinctness, leaving no criterion but the shifting standards of current convention and practice. In fact liability to prosecution for obscene publications really depends far less on what you say or what you depict than on how and when you do so. There is no branch of law in which it is more often true that circumstances alter cases.

One cannot provide very many actual examples of obscenity as dealt with by the courts, for even the law reports practise a high degree of reticence in recording such cases, but a just sense of current conventions is, after all, the best guide. Thus, though perhaps a standard dictionary of slang shows excessive caution or delicacy in substituting a star for the vowel in one of the robuster monosyllables, a novelist, wishing to indicate the same verb is wise to adopt the conventional device of altering the initial consonant and, both in art and literature, there are clearly situations over which, to borrow the phrase of an earlier generation, it is, at any rate, safer to "draw a veil." One or two points may be noted in a general way. An innocent motive does not justify an obscene publication. Once such a publication is proved the court will infer an intention to break the law and it then rests on the defendant to justify his action if he can. From another standpoint, it is no defence to argue that the language published is so gross and foul that, far from corrupting moral people, it would repel them, for, as our judge pointed out, "unfortunately there are others susceptible to lustful ideas upon whom it would have precisely the opposite effect." The tendency looked at is "to deprave, not bishops or respectable people who have got clean minds, but people . . . whose minds are open to such immoral influences." It should further be noted that one solitary obscene passage may render a whole book obscene in law.

The hardest problems arise when considerations of religion, art, literature or science come on the scene. Obviously ministers of religion, who have to deal with people's sins, doctors, who have to deal with their physical and mental diseases, and artists, who must have the most precise and detailed understanding of the structure of the human form, must, in the very nature of their vocations, study matters which in another context would be obscene. There are some actual decided cases marking the distinction. Diagrams of the male and female organs of generation are clearly necessary for the purpose of instructing medical students, but to exhibit similar diagrams to a nonprofessional audience of adult males for the purpose of a general lecture of quasi-philosophical character was held in 1885 to be obscene. Similarly the regeneration of the soul which is the object of the practice of confession in the Roman Catholic Church clearly demands special study on the part of those entrusted with the duty of hearing confessions, and theological works or text-books written in Latin (analogous, in another context, to works on psychology or psychiatry), are properly compiled for this purpose. But to publish for indiscriminate sale translations of those portions relating to the sins of the flesh, was held to be obscene, even though the object of the publisher was not profit but theological controversy and a bona fide attack on the practice of confession.

These decisions follow fairly simple lines. What is permissible in works for specialists is often inadmissible for dissemination among the general public. But in the realms of art and literature it is rather more difficult to draw a line, though nudes in the National Gallery are plainly quite a different proposition from "Buy my filthy postcards" in the open street. Some light is thrown on this aspect of the question by a prosecution in 1900 in respect of an edition of The Heptameron advertised as unexpurgated and sold in a general bookshop at is. iid. In directing the jury the judge placed some interesting considerations before them. He reminded them that in the towns which had lain buried since the corrupt times of the Roman Empire pictures "of the most lewd and filthy character" had been discovered; nobody would think of destroying them, but to sell photographs of them in the streets of London would be an indictable offence. So with this book, it would be perfectly proper to keep it in a students' library, but was it proper to offer it for sale as it had been offered here? The jury acquitted the defendant. In general one may say that serious editions of the classics, even cheap editions, will not attract a prosecution, but a modern poet or writer, as yet unhallowed by the passage of time, would be well advised to avoid too bare and intimate an exposure of physical privacies; the mere allegation of "some literary merit" will not screen him from the consequences of having incorporated gross expressions in writings which he has communicated to others, even though they were intended for circulation among "literary people" only. A writer who attempted to have verses of this character privately printed for circulation among his friends was convicted on the information of the printer whom he had invited to handle them.

History, sociology, zoology, ethnology and innumerable other branches of learning have all aspects which, treated indelicately or irresponsibly, would come within the scope of obscenity, and here current popular theories of education add a further element of complication. From the conception of diligent and protracted application to the study of a given subject under highly qualified instructors, the conception of "education" has been gradually broadened by popularisation to include a vast amount of general dilettantism. With every subject open to everybody through the medium, of digests, outlines, magazine articles and lecture courses much that passes for "education" is little more than what the vaguely curious may gather from the partially instructed.

"Professor Joad
In the Charing Cross Road
Finds that every window averages
Two books about the sexual life of savages."*

Are those books and their like all really advantageous to the advancement of science? One can only say that if, so far as they go, they are seriously instructive they are unlikely to attract a prosecution. In dealing with scientific, medical or religious works, a jury would hesitate to convict save in the case of an evident general mischief or a real danger to public morals. Fiction, in spite of the novel's acknowledged potentialities as a social or a psychological document, is not on such strong ground, though in actual practice a good deal that would formerly have been regarded as verging on the pornographic appears to remain immune.

One final warning, publication of obscene matter is not protected by proof that it is a fair and accurate report of judicial proceedings or of proceedings at a public meeting. It would, of course, be a ridiculous paradox and justice would defeat its own ends if, by getting himself prosecuted, a man could thereby acquire a general licence to go on publishing the obscenity charged in the form of a law report.

THE WRITER AND INCOME TAX

'UST as in the case of the law of libel there is no special branch of it developed as peculiar to writers and authors, so with revenue law, no branch of it has been designed as specially applicable to them, unless you so reckon the provisions of various Finance Acts dealing with the taxation of the proceeds of copyright. Journalists, therefore, who are employed at a salary by a newspaper or a news agency pay their income tax by P.A.Y.E. just like anybody else. The nature of their employment very often involves disbursements directly required by the performance of their work-travelling, entertainment and the like-and these may, of course, be refunded to them by their employers in full. Sometimes it is found more convenient to agree that the periodical sums payable to them shall cover both salary and expenses and in such a case a reasonable deduction from the total sum may be claimed in respect of the expenses before assessment to tax. It is impossible to say in the air what will be regarded as a reasonable proportion, since this must vary with the nature of the work to be done. It is not enough to label a payment as "for expenses" to ensure that it will be so treated for the purposes of taxation. Whether or not a particular expense should be allowed as a deduction from taxable income is always a question of fact depending on whether it was wholly and necessarily incurred in performing the duties of the employment and earning the gross receipts.

The same principle applies to the author or journalist who works on his own account. Postage, telephone calls, stationery, typing, travelling expenses, clerical assistance, may all be necessarily involved in earning his income. He may have to pay fees and commissions to agents. He is traditionally a consumer of midnight oil or current and also fuel as well, and it would seem that all these may properly be debited as a diminution of his taxable profits or gains. No doubt a busy author writing much at home may have to rent a house or flat larger than he would otherwise require, so as to provide study or library accommodation, and the extra expense involved would seem to be in the nature of an allowable expense. It must, however, be noted that what is classed as a capital expenditure is not to be allowed as a deduction. What you pay a typist to type your books or articles is a deductable expense but not the cost of a typewriter which you may purchase to do it yourself. Similarly a subscription to a necessary reference library would again appear to be a deductable expense but not the purchase of a reference book or some other necessary addition to your own library. This distinction is really quite reasonable because otherwise all a man's profits might be removed from the sphere of taxation simply by transforming them into other assets. Nevertheless, in the case of a typewriter used for professional purposes, depreciation might perhaps be taken into account as a factor reducing profits on the ground that it is "plant." It may be observed, however, that law books have been specifically held not to be "plant." The distinction between capital and income lies at the root of all income tax law, though the rules by which "income" is estimated are complex and often highly artificial.

Short of going into all the intricacies of this complicated subject, one can only indicate points to be watched. Place of residence is, for example, an important matter. Thus, in general, if you live and carry on your profession in the United Kingdom the profits of that profession are all taxable in this country, but if you carry it on entirely outside the United Kingdom tax is payable only in respect of the portion of the profits received here. Anyone who lives outside the United Kingdom, whether a British subject or an alien, is taxable on the whole of the profits of any profession exercised by him in the United Kingdom. This needs further elaboration: if the author or journalist, although within the description of a person residing in the United Kingdom, in fact does all his professional work abroad, he will be liable to income tax here only on such of his foreign earnings as he brings, or has remitted, to this country—plus, of course, any copyright royalties paid here. If, however, he is not a person residing in the United Kingdom and carries on his profession entirely outside the country, he will be liable only on any copyright royalties payable from the United Kingdom. Although working entirely abroad, he may write articles for the English press and be paid for them here (e.g. through his London literary agent, who collects from the publishers). The fact of receipt here, in such circumstances, will not make him liable. In the taxation of the profits of professions, another question which may arise is whether a man is in fact carrying on a particular profession. For example, it has been held that a person who writes plays in his spare time, while engaged in another profession, may, nevertheless, also be carrying on the vocation of a dramatist.

The provisions of the various Finance Acts which deal with the question of the taxation of the proceeds of copyright amount to this: In general, the royalties are payable in full and are taxable in the hands of the recipient. Where, however, the royalties are paid to persons whose usual place of residence is outside the United Kingdom, the person paying them must deduct tax first and account to the revenue authorities for it. This last provision, however, is declared not to apply to royalties paid for any dramatic or artistic work for cinematograph production nor to royalties paid in respect of copies of works exported for distribution outside the United Kingdom. Where the tax is to be deducted and accounted for it is to be computed on the net amount of the royalties, after deducting any commission which the payer, if he is a resident agent, is entitled to deduct in respect of services rendered. Where the author of a literary, dramatic, musical or artistic work assigns his copyright wholly or partially in consideration of a lump sum payment and can show that he was engaged on the work for a period exceeding twelve months, there is provision enabling him to claim to have it spread over a number of years for the purposes of assessment to tax. As always, in revenue law, the frontier drawn between capital and income is crucial in the case of copyrights and the general rule is that an outright sale by an author of his copyrights has not the character of a capital transaction and, accordingly, the purchase price is taxable; but a case decided by the House of Lords in 1948 illustrates how particular circumstances may modify the application of the principle. In 1897 a lady obtained a right to dramatise a novel by a prominent author. In 1914 the question of film rights arose and, this being the concern both of the owner of the copyright in the novel and the owner of the copyright in the play, it was agreed that the latter should receive one-third of all the sums received in respect of those rights. In 1939 there was granted and assigned to a film company for a period of ten years "the sole and exclusive motion picture rights throughout the world " in the novel and the play together with the exclusive right to adapt and change the material, to reproduce by cinematograph, both pictorially and audibly, to exhibit by television, to interpolate other dialogue and to make records. The consideration paid was £8,000 and the author of the play received onethird of this. As by that time she was no longer carrying on the profession of a dramatist, the amount she received could not be taxed as "annual profits or gains of her profession "and so an attempt was made to tax it under another provision as annual profits on gains not otherwise charged. Now, the reason that the proceeds of the sale of copyrights by an author are taxable as income is that copyrights are a commodity in which he deals. But here was a sale of a portion of her copyright by a person who, being no longer a dramatist, was not dealing in copyrights, and the question was simply: was this a capital transaction, like the casual sale of any other piece of property, or an income transaction? The House of Lords held that it was a capital transaction which did not give rise to annual profits or gains.

RECENT DECISIONS

A CONCRETE example can fix the impression of the application of an abstract principle. So here are some recent decisions on points of interest to writers, mostly cases on the law of libel:

Hough v. London Express Newspaper, Ltd. (Court of Appeal, 1940.) This was a libel case and the words complained of were these: "Frank Hough's curly-headed wife sees every fight. 'I should be in more suspense at home' she says. 'I always get nervous when he gets in the ring, although I know he won't get hurt. Nothing puts him off his food. He always eats a cooked meal at night, however late it is when he gets in." Actually the curlyheaded lady was not the boxer's wife, but it was the wife who brought the libel action against the newspaper and recovered £50 damages. Her case was that the words meant and were understood to mean that she was a dishonest woman falsely passing herself off as a married woman and that she was unmarried and had cohabited with Hough and had children by him. support of this contention she called witnesses who gave evidence as to the meaning the words suggested to their minds but who admitted that they knew she was the wife of the boxer. The Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of the judge, held that where words are not defamatory in their primary sense but are capable of being understood in a secondary sense which is defamatory, by persons aware of certain special facts, then, to support an innuendo that the words bear that secondary meaning, it is enough to prove that there are persons who are aware of those special facts and therefore might understand the words in a defamatory sense and it is not essential to establish that they did so understand them.

Lyon v. Daily Telegraph, Ltd. (Court of Appeal, 1943.) Under the heading "Flabby Entertainment," a daily paper published several letters on broadcast entertainments. One signed "A. Winslow," with the address "The Vicarage, Wellington Road, Winchester," was as follows: "Every evening at church time there is put on the air a costly broadcast which is an insult to British intelligence. The type of humour consists of a vulgar exchange of abuse. One comedian alludes to the other as 'a louse' and his chief humorous contribution is to say 'I'm laughing me blooming head off'. The woman artist has a fair voice and sometimes sings a good song, but for the most part she indulges in vulgar wisecracks. We must be a nation of lunatics to permit such a waste of money for such a very sordid show." It afterwards transpired that the signature and the address were fictitious. The two chief performers who were mainly responsible for the entertainment brought an action for libel, alleging that the words meant that it was so offensive that a clergyman felt constrained to pillory those concerned in it. The proprietors of the paper pleaded fair comment on a matter of public interest. The Court of Appeal held that the action failed. To sustain the defence it was not essential to show that the writer of the letter honestly held the opinion expressed in it. A newspaper was under no duty to verify the name and address of a correspondent and it was irrelevant that the writer had given a fictitious name and address. It should be noted that in this case it was held that the opinion expressed was one which could be honestly held.

Theorp v. Hulton Press, Ltd. (Court of Appeal, 1943.) An illustrated magazine printed two photographs on adjacent pages, one of a man holding a garden fork threateningly, with the caption " Keep out of my garden," the other of the plaintiff, the manager of a model millinery business, holding a block of a woman's head with a hat trimmed with snowdrops and under it the caption "I only wanted a few pansies." The plaintiff brought an action for libel and at the trial his counsel asked a witness, "Are you familiar with the use of the word pansy in relation to a male person? Having regard to these two photographs . . . what did you understand the word pansies to mean?" The judge, however, disallowed the questions on the ground that their effect would be to ask the witness what the libel meant, whereas that was a matter for the jury. He held that the words were incapable of a defamatory meaning. On appeal it was submitted on behalf of the plaintiff that evidence of the slang meaning of "pansy" as applied to a man should have been admitted. The Court agreed, holding that the plaintiff would suffer a grievous wrong if the word had the slang meaning alleged and ordered a new trial.

Knupffer v. Express Newspaper, Ltd. (House of Lords, 1944.) The words complained of were as follows: "But the quislings on whom Hitler flatters himself he can build a pro-German movement within the Soviet Union are an emigré group called Mlado Russ or Young Russia. They are a minute body professing a pure Fascist ideology who have long sought a suitable fuehrer-I know with what success. Established in France and the United States, they claim to have secret agents able to enter or leave the Soviet Union at will. Hitler intends to nominate a puppet fuehrer from their ranks to replace the Soviet national leaders of the Kremlin and to establish a reactionary totalitarian serf state on the German and Italian model. The proposed line of operation is the seducing of Red Army officers from their allegiance to their country and with their aid destroying trade unions, cooperatives, collective farms and the Soviet parliamentary system, with a ruthless massacre of all the present leaders, great and small, of the Russian people. The vast majority of Russian emigrés repudiate these people, but Hitler is accustomed to find instruments among the despised drags of every community." This was published in a London daily newspaper in 1941. The group referred to numbered about 2,000 in all with a British branch of twenty-four. In June 1940, the headquarters were removed from Paris to the United States of America. The plaintiff, a Russian resident in London, joined in 1928, became assistant representative of the British branch in 1935 and representative in 1938. He brought an action for libel against the newspaper proprietors, who did not contend that the words were true but denied that they were published of the plaintiff or were reasonably capable of being understood to refer to him. The House of Lords held that the action must fail as the words were not capable of being understood as a defamation of the plaintiff. When the plaintiff is not named in the words complained of, the test of whether they are published of him is whether they would reasonably lead persons acquainted with him to conclude that he was referred to. When a defamatory statement of a class or group can reasonably be understood to refer to every member of it, each one has a cause of action.

National Union of General and Municipal Workers v. Gillian. (Court of Appeal, 1945) and Willis v. Brooks (King's Bench Division, 1946) were two cases in which it was held that a registered trade union can bring an action for libel. In the latter case the words complained of were held to mean that a ballot had been "rigged" and it was further held there was a libel on which the union could sue and that accordingly in an action brought by the union it was no defence to say that the accusation was not against it but against its officers.

Robinson v. Chambers (King's Bench Division, Northern Ireland, 1946.) Here, following an older English case, it was held that to read aloud a defamatory document to any other than the person defamed is publication of a libel and not the lesser wrong of slander. In the course of his judgment Mr. Justice MacDermott observed that a defamatory broadcast is a libel if made from a script or a recording. (It is interesting to note that he has since been raised to the House of Lords as a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary.)

Lea v. Justice of the Peace, Ltd. (King's Bench Division, 1947.) After a society wedding a reception was held at a private house to which press photographers were not admitted. Nevertheless, the plaintiff, a photographer employed by the Daily Mirror, succeeded in entering and without permission suddenly took a flashlight photograph of the bridal pair. The bridegroom immediately struck him and he was ejected. In subsequent police court proceedings the bridegroom was fined for the assault, the magistrate describing his action as ungentlemanly and cowardly. In commenting on the case a legal periodical subsequently suggested that these epithets exactly fitted such intruders as the plaintiff, who consequently brought an action for libel against the proprietors. The judge held that the action must be dismissed, the facts stated in the article being true and the comment fair. He further observed that "the press has no right to go into private places and to intrude upon private people and into private rights and that the standard of conduct and manners demanded of them is as high a standard as should be demanded of every citizen in a civilised community."

Turner v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, Ltd. (King's Bench Division, 1947.) The plaintiff was a film critic who had broadcast criticisms. matter complained of was in a letter sent by the defendants to the Director of Talks of the British Broadcasting Corporation, stating (a) that she was "completely out of touch with the tastes and entertainment requirements of the picture-going millions who are also radio listeners" and (b) that "her criticisms are on the whole unnecessarily harmful to the film industry." They added that they did not propose to invite her to review their films in future and asked for co-operation in restraining her from doing so in B.B.C. broadcasts. In the plaintiff's action for libel the judge held that there was evidence to support the finding of the jury that the defendants were actuated by malice. He further held that the letter did not reflect on the competence of the plaintiff but that it was capable of a defamatory meaning in that it suggested that she had gone out of her way to harm the industry which supported the art which was the subject-matter of her criticisms. Accordingly he gave judgment for the amount of damages assessed by the jury: f1,000 for the letter and £500 for the repetition of its contents by telephone to a journalist.

The King v. Caunt. (Liverpool Assizes, 1947.) This was a prosecution of the editor of a weekly newspaper for seditious libel in writing and publishing an article in which it was stated: "There is very little about which to rejoice greatly except the present fact that only a handful of Jews bespoil the population of our borough. The foregoing sentence may be regarded as an outburst of anti-Semitism; it is intended to be." After referring to two soldiers murdered in Palestine the article said: "It is not sufficient for British Jews, who have proved to be the worst black market offenders, to rush into print with howls of horror . . . They should disgorge their ill-gotten wealth in trying to dissuade their brothers in the United States from pouring out dollars to facilitate the entrance into Palestine of European Jewish scum, a proportion of whom will swell the ranks of the terrorist organisation and thus carry on the murderous work which British Jewry professes to abhor. There is a growing feeling that Britain is in the grip of the Jews. There are more Jewish M.P.'s than at any time in English history and . . . if any analysis could be made of the people convicted of black market offences the Iewish community in Britain would come out an easy first. The Iews indeed are a plague to Britain. . . . Let our readers resolve to ostracise in every way possible the Jewish community until they . . . take practical and effectual steps . . . in dissuading their brother Jews from committing dastardly acts of violence against the sons of a country which has given them shelter, protection and a very good living. . . . Violence may be the only way to bring not mend their ways. He did not believe that the ostracism suggested would result in violence on the part of the Jewish community. The judge said that the question was whether it was proved beyond reasonable doubt that the defendant published the libel intending to promote violence by stirring up hostility between different classes of the King's subjects. The onus was on the prosecution. It was equally important that the liberty of the press should remain inviolate and that it should not be exceeded. The jury acquitted the defendant.

The King v. Williams. (Cardiff Assizes, 1947.) In this prosecution for criminal libel the judge said: "Criminal proceedings may be taken if the defendants published defamatory words about a man who is dead, providing the obvious tendency is to provoke the family to a breach of the peace . . . It is enough that the natural effect of the words is to dishonour the memory of the deceased man and outrage his posterity to such an extent as to render a breach of the peace imminent or probable."

G. A. Cramp & Sons, Ltd., v. Frank Smythson, Ltd. (House of Lords, 1944.) This was a copyright case arising out of a dispute between two firms publishing pocket diaries. The question was whether certain matters included in the diaries of Frank Smythson, Ltd. (e.g. a calendar for the year; postal rates; weights and measures tables, lighting-up times, a percentage table) were copyright. The House of Lords, allowing the appeal of G. A. Cramp & Sons, Ltd., held that copyright was not established, as the commonplace matter of the tables left no room for taste or judgment and the selection of them did not constitute an original literary work.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS LIBRARY By Charles Clay, C.B.

T was not until 1826 that the desire for a Library was first expressed by members of the House of Lords. In that year Sir John Soane was instructed to fit up a room and a Librarian was appointed. During the next year the Librarian was authorised to purchase a number of books, chiefly of a legal character, and this collection was the foundation upon which the present Library has been built. Almost all the books were saved from the fire which destroyed the Houses of Parliament in 1834.

After the fire, the importance of the Library was more fully recognised and Charles Barry's design for the new Palace of Westminster included the four rooms overlooking the river which now form the main Library. They were ready for occupation in 1848. The first books to fill the shelves were those which had been saved from the fire, together with an important collection of about 1,700 volumes in the French language which had been presented as early as 1835 by the French Chamber of Peers but had been waiting for suitable accommodation. This gift was followed in 1856 by the presentation by his widow of the law library formed by Lord Truro, who had been Lord Chancellor from 1850 to 1852. This collection, which is preserved as a separate entity, consists of about 3,000 volumes and contains many early works of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It also includes not only the law reports and legal text-books ordinarily used by a lawyer of the first half of the nineteenth century, but also considerable sections on the history of law and of Parliamentary institutions. The gem of the collection is a fine copy of Statham's Abridgment which was printed for Richard Pynson by Guillaume Le Talleur at Rouen about 1490.

During the last hundred years the Library has been extended in a variety of ways and now numbers about eighty thousand books. Special consideration has always been given to the law and Parliamentary side, but there are also large sections devoted to history, in its widest sense, and to English literature; and art, theology, and the classics are well represented. A catalogue of the non-legal books was compiled by Sir Edmund Gosse, Librarian from 1904 to 1914, and was printed in 1908. The Library possesses complete sets of the Journals of both Houses; a set of such Private Acts as were officially printed from the year 1718; sets of Parliamentary Debates; and a section, extensive in its scope, which consists of books on the specialised subject of Peerage Law, including the proceedings in Peerage Cases, both printed and in manuscript. There are also many sets of publications issued by historical and other societies, and a practically complete set of the publications issued by the Commissioners on the Public Records, and by the Public Record Office.

To-day the Library performs several related functions. It is used for the legislative work of a Second Chamber, and for the varied needs of members of the House of Lords. It supplies the books for the judicial work of the House as the supreme Court of Appeal in Great Britain and Northern Ireland; and of late years it has acted practically, though not nominally, as a departmental library for the Lord Chancellor.

When the House of Lords is not sitting for public business, visitors are shown a selection of manuscripts displayed in the Queen's Room. These form part of the large collection of House of Lords Manuscripts which are stored in the Victoria Tower in the custody of the Clerk of the Parliaments. One case contains the original letter of Charles I to the House of Lords in 1641, pleading for Strafford after his attainder; the warrant for the execution of the King, signed by Oliver Cromwell and other members of the Court set up for his trial, which was produced at the trial of the regicides in 1660 by Colonel Hacker, the first of the three officers to whom it was directed; and the declaration from Breda signed by Charles II on the eve of the Restoration. A second case includes Commissions for the prorogation of Parliament signed by Henry VIII, Edward VI, Elizabeth and James I, the last three with the Great Seal attached; and the original Act embodying the Petition of Right of 1628, showing the cut which removed the King's conditional approval. In a third case is one of the three surviving copies of the Articles of Union between England and Scotland signed in 1706 by the Commissioners of both countries, headed respectively by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Lord Chancellor of Scotland.

A fourth case contains the manuscript Prayer Book formerly attached to the Act of Uniformity of 1662, which is the authority for our present Prayer Book; together with the Prayer Book of 1636 with the alterations and additions in the handwriting of William Sancroft, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, who acted as Secretary to the Committee of Revision in 1661. A fifth case contains a holograph letter of James I to Cecil; and, of special interest, some of the letters, written to each other by Charles I and Henrietta Maria, which were captured by Fairfax in the King's cabinet at the Battle of Naseby in 1645. Another case contains the Cranmer Bible which lay on the table of the House of Lords from the time of Queen Elizabeth and was rescued from the fire of 1834.

Few of the many thousands of visitors to the Library fail to show pleasure as they look from the Queen's Room at the other rooms of the Library, lined with richly carved oak designed by Augustus Pugin, and decorated with the arms of the Lord Chief Justices of England, placed there, perhaps, by reason of the proximity of the Library to the former seat of the Law Courts in Westminster Hall. It was fortunate that during the war of 1939-45, although the Library was in the immediate zone of damage, no harm was caused to any of its books.

LITERARY MARKETS AND REQUIREMENTS

THE BRITISH PRESS IN WARTIME

By A. J. Cummings

NDER the gravest handicaps the British Press played a great part in the Second World War. Its main tasks were to present the news of the day in so far as that could be done without aiding the enemy and to co-operate with the Administration in maintaining the morale of the people.

It had also the duty of explaining the Government's war measures which affected harshly the life of the nation and sometimes of putting them to the test of public criticism. Extreme care had to be exercised in dealing with military matters, or with matters that might have a military implication; and newspaper correspondents at the front, often taken into the confidence of commanders in the field, were under a solemn responsibility to avoid the risk of giving away information that might be valuable to the enemy.

It is to the credit of these able and fearless men, some of whom lost their lives on the battlefield, that they never betrayed their trust. Field-Marshal Lord Alexander and others in high command afterwards paid just tribute to the integrity of the war correspondents.

In the majority of cases, even after messages from the front had passed the military censor on the spot, newspaper editors took the precaution, when in the slightest doubt, of submitting them before publication to the official censors at home.

The Press censorship was a voluntary arrangement. That is to say, newspaper editors were not under compulsion to place any material in the hands of the censor before publication, though, of course, the consequences would have been serious if an uncensored statement damaging to the national security had been allowed to appear in print.

On the whole the voluntary arrangement worked well. If the Press had been unresponsive the censorship must have been made compulsory. There were occasional examples of stupidity on the part of inexperienced and timid officials. But under the Chief Censor, Admiral Thomson, this department was for the most part helpful and constructive and did its best to avoid pettifogging restrictions.

Secret warnings and directives issued from time to time to the Press were of real assistance, since they enabled editorial staffs to form a proper judgment in doubtful cases, besides giving them early intimation of events that might present awkward news problems.

The expression of editorial opinion rarely came under the censor's eye; but even in that field it was necessary to be for ever on the watch lest an imprudent comment should give away a defect in our war-time economy that it was desirable to keep secret.

The one newspaper war casualty was the Communist "Daily Worker," which was suppressed by the Government in January, 1941, and allowed to reappear in August, 1942, more than a year after Russia had become involved in the conflict.

There was a close and continuous connection between the Press and the Ministry of Information. In the early days of the war this newly-organised Department of State did not function very efficiently. But when it had found its feet, and had assembled a competent staff, its relations with the Press greatly improved.

Nearly all official communications to the Press came through the Ministry. It was through the M.O.I. that British and Allied newspapermen could arrange interviews with Service spokesmen, occasionally with Ministers. Press conferences were held regularly at the M.O.I. headquarters in Malet Street; and all Press inquiries—they must have numbered scores of thousands—were handled by this exceedingly industrious Ministry.

One problem the M.O.I. could not help to solve was the rapid shrinking of newsprint which reduced the size of newspapers to a pitiful shadow of their former substance. The shrinkage began at once.

Then came the German invasion of Norway in the spring of 1940, which meant that leading newspapers had to cut their pre-war size from twenty or twenty-four pages to ten. In normal times Scandinavia sent us not only finished newsprint but nearly all the pulp used as raw material by the British newsprint mills. Up to April, 1940, reduced quantities of newsprint and pulp had been coming in at high cost.

After the invasion, the supply from Scandinavia completely stopped. Newsprint and some raw material continued to come from Canada and Newfoundland. But shipping priority had to be given to food and munitions; and the oversea supplies fell far short of the current rate of consumption.

In the summer of 1940, with the overrunning of France, the Newspaper Supply Company, representing all the papers in the country, was formed. Ships and stocks of paper were pooled; and a considerable amount of capital was put up, enabling the company to buy, charter, build and manage a small fleet of ships and to make contracts ahead for the purchase of newsprint.

Several of these ships were sunk; and as the pressure of war increased it became apparent that there must be a still more radical limitation in the size of newspapers. In the end the mass-circulation newspapers were cut to four pages a day; and other journals had to suffer a reduction in the same proportion.

The shortage involved a "ceiling" for circulation and a new and difficult editorial technique in all newspaper offices. Valuable and established features were ruthlessly eliminated; and the selection of news, in such a way as not to miss its positive significance and to preserve some sense of balance, called for a new journalistic expertness and imposed a heavy and constant strain upon the staff in every department.

The achievement has astonished an American Press still enjoying the luxury of vast quantities of newsprint. It has also won the admiration of our professional brothers in the U.S.A. Mr. R. L. Williams, Press Editor of the well-known American magazine, "Time," wrote in his journal in 1947 that "Fleet Street's fifteen dailies could be tucked under the arm more easily than a midweek copy of the hefty 'New York Times'"; and he added:

"Britain's editors have found ways to give their readers (50 million plus, daily and Sunday) more and more news in less and less space. They have trimmed margins, shrunk headlines, fitted stories into pages like jigsaw puzzles, even used the 'gutters' between pages.

"And they have sharpened their copy pencils; one of the sweeter uses of austerity has been a gain in crispness and readability."

For all London newspapers and for many newspapers in the provinces the problems of production and distribution were intensified by the bombing raids. The war did not find the British Press entirely unprepared for this eventuality. For some months before the war, first-aid detachments, gas squads and fire squads had been learning their jobs. Stocks of newsprint were increased. In many instances roofs and ceilings were strengthened and shelters prepared. Arrangements were made between newspaper offices to help each other out in case of danger; and plans were devised to publish in the country if the position in London should become untenable.

Though the London offices had to bear the most sustained attacks from the air, provincial offices also suffered heavily. Some offices were destroyed; many were damaged; others were incapacitated through indirect causes. In one case a daily paper was printed on the tennis court of a country house; at another time four dailies shared plant and presses intended for only one; Linotype machines were installed in stables and a printing press was set up in a weaving shed.

Countless difficulties had to be overcome and countless improvisations promptly engineered. The bombing of railways was an unceasing anxiety, especially for the transport of London newspapers, and necessitated rapid readjustments to ensure their despatch. Yet no London newspaper stopped publication for a single day or allowed distribution to be brought to a standstill.

For a short period after the war there was some hope of a gradual enlargement of the size of British newspapers. Before the war, newspapers and weekly periodicals in this country consumed 1,250,000 tons of paper a year.

In 1945 their annual consumption, under the quota laid down by the Government, was 299,000 tons. In September, 1946, they obtained an increased ration of newsprint, which permitted the popular dailies to enlarge their size to an average of five pages a day.

Then, however, came the dollar crisis; and in July, 1947, the Press was required to save the equivalent of £3,000,000 a year in dollars on its newsprint supplies, with the result that the four-page daily reappeared. In 1948, notwithstanding many appeals to the Government to relent, the position has not changed; and there is very little prospect of any considerable or early improvement.

The Press in Britain performs its duty to the public in the face of serious impediments, professional and economic. But it survives.

THE SHORT STORY

By L. A. G. Strong

♦HE short story is less standardised today than at any time in its This history, we must not forget, is relatively short.

The short story was first of all told by word of mouth. Any that we find in ancient literature were incorporated in longer works; and, with a few exceptions, this was the rule for all short stories until about a hundred years ago. Then a handful of writers began to devote to the composition of a short story the same kind of care which hitherto had gone to a lyric poem. First in Russia, then in America and in France, writers of the first stature gave their full powers to the writing of short stories. The influence of such writers as Flaubert and Merimée fell on our own Wedmore and Crackanthorpe. and in the late 'eighties and early 'nineties a number of short story writers appeared, fully fledged, with an energy and richness of invention that made the short story popular with public and critics alike. By a coincidence, the leading practitioners, Kipling, Wells, Jacobs, and Conan Doyle over here, and, in America, O. Henry and Jack London, were all extroverts and wrote stories of plot and action; with the result that editors assumed plot and action to be essential ingredients in a short story.

The natural reaction against this belief and practice brought a flood of introspective stories, without plot, in which character and atmosphere were studied for their own sake, and not as subsidiary to action. This type of story, with Tchekov as high priest, had to fight a long struggle against editorial obsession with the plot and action story. By and large, these stories got the worst of it, satisfying a minority only, and finding homes in reviews and journals of select appeal.

The war years, however, have very much weakened the editorial obsession with plot. Certain magazines, notably Penguin New Writing, under the enterprising editorship of Mr. John Lehmann, printing stories which no editor of a popular magazine would look at, have had a success and circulation which made the said editors gasp and rub their eyes. The immense demand for the plot story in the years leading up to the war had turned the writing of such stories into an industry—the manufacture of what H. G. Wells used to call "trade goods," stories written to formula with no intention other than to please editors. It would appear that the realities of wartime have made the general public a little less ready to accept this kind of thing. People have begun to notice—not long before it was time—the peddling of dope on a grand scale which was for so long the chief occupation of the popular magazine. What is more, a new public, fed on the sterner fare offered by Penguin New Writing, Modern Reading, The Hour Glass Library, and other productions which made no concessions whatever to popular taste as understood by the editors of popular magazines, will not look at the factory-produced, wishfulfilment stories which were the popular magazine's stock-in-trade.

The result of all this is that many editors of popular magazines, not knowing what the public wants, are taking what would once have seemed to them unheard-of chances. They are accepting stories of a kind they would have contemptuously rejected fifteen or even ten years ago. Their taste is as unpredictable and arbitrary as ever it was, but they are no longer certain that they know what they want.

Thus the outlook for the new writer is more hopeful than it ever has beenand this is in spite of paper restrictions and other material obstacles. It is to be hoped that writers will take advantage of the present editorial uncertainty, and, by bombarding editors with stories of individual quality, will make new standards before the editors can lead the public back into the old morass. How deep a morass it was a whole generation of short story writers can bear witness.

THE BOOK TRADE SINCE 1939

By Christina Foyle

NY review of the British book trade since 1939 must necessarily place particular emphasis upon the tremendous increase in the public's demand for books.

During the war-years this increase was attributed to the black-out which kept people indoors, to the demand for books from members of the Forces, and to the scarcity of most other classes of merchandise. Today, however, with no black-out to hamper travel, with most Service men and women back in civilian life, with merchandise returning to the shops, and with a wide range of entertainments competing for the public's time and money, the demand for books shows little sign of diminishing. I believe I am right in claiming that the average bookseller is maintaining his turnover at not less than three times the pre-war figure.

Nevertheless, it is true that readers are showing a keener discrimination in their book buying, and in the book trade we welcome clear signs of the public's improved taste. The days of indiscriminate buying are ended and we may now expect to see-indeed we have begun to see-the undesirable type of volume fade gently from the literary scene.

Ask any bookseller for the titles which have headed his sales since 1939 and you will be told Richard Hillary's "The Last Enemy," Paul Gallico's "The Snowgoose," Elizabeth Goudge's "Green Dolphin Country" and Eric Knight's "This Above All." The revived interest in the classics which we saw in the early years of the war continues, too, and the sales of books by the Bröntes, Jane Austen, Dickens and Trollope are unabated. Some indication of the extent of this revival may be seen in the extraordinary number of new editions of the classics published during the past few years.

One of the most serious aspects of present-day bookselling is the acute shortage of every kind of text-book and no bookseller can supply more than a small fraction of the thousands of essential titles which are in constant

That this scarcity is already having a serious effect on the educational standard of this nation. Members of Parliament of all parties have attested and the Ministry of Education has expressed its concern over the volume of complaints received about the shortage.

Credit is unquestionably due to both publishers and booksellers for the manner in which they have co-operated to keep the prices of books down. With soaring prices in almost every other field of daily life, the increase in book prices has been almost negligible. To publishers, too, must go high praise for the way in which—despite tremendous shortages of materials and labour—they have maintained extremely high standards of production. In recent years the radio programmes of the B.B.C. have become one of the most powerful influences in the moulding of the public's reading taste. inclusion of a dramatised version of a novel in a B.B.C. programme inevitably creates an immediate demand for the book, and almost every bookshop in the country can report what is little short of a stampede for any volume which wins for itself the privilege of serialisation in a B.B.C. programme.

To the demand for new and second-hand books must also be added the remarkable increase in the sales of rare books and collectors' items. The past few years have brought about a tremendous increase in the number of serious collectors and many antiquarian booksellers are enjoying an unprecedented prosperity.

To sum up, I would say that the British book trade has emerged from the war-years unspoiled by its success and better organised than ever before to deal with the many problems of the future. The book trade has maintained its many fine traditions. It is still a highly individualistic trade in which personality and intelligence are essential qualities for success.

THE PUBLIC. SCIENCE AND THE PRESS

By Ritchie Calder

THE man in the street's interest in science and scientific discoveries is widespread and unsatisfied. He cannot get what he wants from his newspapers which, with their restricted space, can give only limited coverage to science. There are few magazines to which he can turn for the kind of thing he wants and book publishers, who find it hard enough to meet the demand for scientific text-books, are discouraged in their attempts to meet the popular demand. With a lively interest in science, greater even than in the "Golden Age" when H. G. Wells, Ray Lankester, Arthur Thomson and Jeans were writing their best sellers, popular science writing is frustrated.

Never has there been so much to write about and, relatively, so few facilities for getting it into print. As a result the ranks of the science writers are depleted and recruiting has declined. There are few opportunities for "bringing on" writers with an interest in science or for helping scientists (now more than ever, in these days of specialisation, developing a jargon of their own) to find popular expression.

Economic stringencies are preventing the flowering of a great tradition of British science and British literature. For it is a great tradition; Britain used to set an example to the world.

It is a tradition which goes back to Francis Bacon. In "New Atlantis" he insisted that experimental science should replace the pure exercise of logic which had sterilised the philosophy in the Middle Ages. He maintained that science "shall be operative to the endowment and betterment of man's life." Jan Comenius, the Czech educator, came to Britain in 1639 with a proposal to set up a "Universal College" in London where the wise men of the world would foregather to carry our researches into nature and to disseminate the truths of discovery for the enlightenment and well-being of the common man. He had such a favourable reception that what is now the Chelsea Hospital for Pensioners was earmarked for his college and his scheme was before Parliament when the Civil War broke out.

The Royal Society, founded in 1660, directed its original "Heads of Inquiry" to practical ends like the propagation of fruits and trees, the advancement of navigation and the construction of ships and help for British agriculture. It became in time the august learned society which we now know. The Royal Institution which followed it also aimed at the instruction of the people and established in 1799 laboratories and lecture rooms. It became the centre of the researches of Davy and Faraday, but its lectures became fashionable and catered more for the middle classes, who fancied themselves the patrons of the sciences than for the hoi-poloi.

In 1831 the British Association set out to reach the people; it went down into the market place. Every year it took the great scientists and their discoveries into the provinces to meet the people. It founded lectures for operatives and its discussions were the great annual feature of all newspapers. All the scientific giants of the nineteenth century at one time or another explained their work from its platforms. The great Tyndal started lectures for the working man which are now the public lectures of the B.A.

The public listened to and read of the expositions of Thomas Huxley. Ray Lankester wrote regularly popular explanations of science as "The Armchair Scientist." H. G. Wells, the biologist, abandoned research and teaching to become the greatest scientific expositor of them all. By the device of his scientific novels, replete with sound knowledge and uncanny scientific predictions, he excited succeeding generations about the adventure of science. He produced his encyclopædic books. He preached, in season and out of season, the need for popular understanding of science and of its implications. Sir Arthur Thomson made serious biology a lively subject for the people. Sir James Jeans brought the universe to our firesides. And, in another generation, Julian Huxley, Andrade, Crowther, Hogben, Bernal and Haldane made it their business to be more than scientists and to put into plain words the rewarding excitement of scientific work.

Before the Second World War British science writing had reached a maturity which was not conspicuous in the national press. What popular newspapers (with few exceptions) had failed to grasp and exploit was the new and informed intelligence of their readers. Northcliffe, when he founded "Answers" in the Daily Mail, realised that he was catering for the new literates who were emerging from the schools after the Education Act of 1872. He gave them the magic of science, the romance of aviation and the mysteries of the universe. Since his day generations have emerged from a school system which is no longer merely the teaching of the three R's; generations which have had either a secondary school education or vocational training which in one way or another has brought them in touch with technics and at least the fringes of science.

Today, consciously or unconsciously, there are few people who have not experienced science. The ordinary chap may not know the academic truths of science or the abracadabra of the specialised text-books. But without knowing anything about Abbe Mendel, he expects his sixpenny seed packet which he plants in his allotment to obey his laws. Knowing nothing of Clark Maxwell or Hertz or Popov, he relies on the radio waves faithfully to deliver him the nine o'clock news. Ignorant of J. J. Thomson or electronics, he pays his ninepence and goes to the talkies. He may say: "And who's Faraday and what's electromagnetism?" but he knows enough to mend a fuse and complete a circuit. Science to him is the drug which saves his child's life; the refrigerator his wife wants; the plastic moulding which threatens his craft as a cabinet maker; the uncanny predictor which he used, perhaps, in the Home Guard anti-aircraft battery, and the precision instruments which makes him think of his job in clearances of thousandths of an inch.

He wants to know about science; he wants it made intelligible in terms of his everyday experience; he wants it in a language he can understand. It is not asking much. Scientists who might think it vulgar or inaccurate to translate their own "slang" into simple English find it difficult to understand their colleagues in other branches, which have a "slang" of their own. There is no more reason why Bill Brown should be expected to understand the cryptograms of science than to understand my particular breed of shorthand; it has to be translated.

The problem today is how we are to "bring on" journalists who will specialise in science, or scientists who will practise journalism. Both are needed if we are to serve the public and save the traditions of British scientific writing.

THE B.B.C. CHILDREN'S HOUR

By Derek McCulloch, O.B.E., Head of Children's Hour

THIS is not intended to be an article so much as a guide to those who have ambitions to write for this sphere in broadcasting.

The primary object of the B.B.C. Children's Hour is to provide a daily programme for young listeners. While the audience is very considerably the same as that in schools broadcasting, the programmes are different. For schools the programmes are educational, but in the case of Children's Hour the object mainly is to entertain.

Let it be clear that there is a definite policy behind the Children's Hour programmes, and that the days of the comic uncle, the coy aunt, and the "anything-will-do-for-kids" kind of attitude is as dead as the dodo.

Almost all varieties of broadcast programmes are represented in the Children's Hour: Music, Drama, Talks, Features, Variety, Stories, Quizzes, Competitions, Religious Services and Outside Broadcasts. The established policy is that nothing but the best is good enough for children who are the citizens of the future; we try to give them entertainment only of the best quality. We do not aim primarily at educating our listeners, except it is true to say that good music and good literature are educative in the best sense, but we have to remember that most of our audience have had a day in school, and many have homework in prospect. We want to stimulate their imagination, direct their reading, encourage their various interests, widen their outlook, and inculcate the Christian principles of love of God and their neighbour.

Of the main programme headings mentioned in the previous paragraph only details concerning plays, talks, stories and features need be examined and expanded in this publication.

DRAMA

All kinds of plays are acceptable; adventure, historical, fairy, domestic and biographical. | Serial plays are marketable and may be either original writings or adaptations of classics, such as "David Copperfield," "Treasure Island," "Ivanhoe," etc., and of modern books that lend themselves to microphone production.

In general, complete plays should be written for production of approximately forty-five to fifty minutes, including musical links or interludes. Music is not essential. The narrator may have to play his part in maintaining continuity between scenes, but to give him whole chunks of narrative is a confession of weakness on the part of the author, who should dramatise as much of the action as possible. The age range is about twelve to sixteen years.

A common error found in plays submitted for radio production is the inclusion of a host of stage directions. This can mean only two things: the author has not got in his mind the true value of the medium of radio, or he has sloppily adapted from a version written for the theatrical stage.

Unless the author is skilled he may be well advised to omit technical directions relating to "fades" and "crossfades," and also to sound effects. The radio script editor will take care of all such niceties. It is so often overlooked that radio is an art demanding specialised presentation, and that the listener has to rely upon his ears and his imagination. The author must write accordingly. N.B.—Bad language and stories of serious crime are banned absolutely.

For younger listeners, say from six to eleven years, plays of thirty minutes are adequate in length, and some consideration may be given to the possibility of the use of sound effects, especially everyday noises.

In no case should children be "written down to" as on the average they are fairly intelligent human beings.

STORIES

There is a ready market for good quality stories. Fixing an age range is difficult, but it is generally accepted that the listening tastes of average children do not differ to any appreciable extent. Broadly speaking, stories for children may be put into two main groups: ages six to eleven and, say, twelve to sixteen plus. Length of about 1,800 words is suitable for younger, and 2,000 to 2,500 for older ones. Stories of all kinds are acceptable, fairy, domestic, animal, adventure, travel and so on, but the warning must again be sounded that the "anything-will-do-for-children" attitude that is adopted by some authors will not meet with success in stories submitted for Children's Hour.

TALKS

Talks form a considerably important part of Children's Hour programmes, covering topicalities, world and current affairs, animals, travel, hobbies, art, such as musical appreciation and pictures, and films, sport, natural history, etc.

As a general rule talks are included only in the "older" part of the programme, and their length should be about 2,000 words, or twelve to fourteen minutes, and rarely longer unless they are illustrated in some way or another, perhaps by music or with sound effects. In every case the acknowledged expert is employed rather than the writer who builds up his manuscript on information culled from the encyclopædia.

For obvious reasons details of financial rates in respect of literary contributions cannot be entered into here, but it may be said that the remuneration is sufficient to attract writers, both expert and eminent in their respective subjects.

FEATURES

Radio features demand skilled writing and are specialised in every sense. Feature writing for radio is, in fact, a real art. It is not sufficient to have inside knowledge of, say, the workings of a cotton mill or a coal mine. Dramatic writing and an easy, clear, progressive build-up of the whole story, a combination of interest and entertainment is necessary. The field is wide enough but the danger lies in assembling a rather dull sequence of facts without a story thread running through the composition.

CONCLUSION

No reasonable suggestion for Children's Hour programmes is disregarded without proper consideration, and every manuscript submitted is examined by a Reading Panel. The writer strongly suggests that those wishing to write for this department in broadcasting might profit by listening to some of the programmes, thus gaining first-hand impressions of the types of material used and the form of presentation.

Programmes are not confined to London, and authors living outside the area of the Home Counties should submit MSS. to the Children's Hour at the Broadcasting House headquarters situated in the various Regions.

Manuscripts should always be typewritten and a stamped and addressed envelope enclosed if safe return is to be ensured. No responsibility can be taken for the loss of any MSS.

B.B.C. REQUIREMENTS

TALKS

HE B.B.C. welcomes manuscripts either from experts or from people with a personal experience to describe: suggestions for single talks are more acceptable than for series. Manuscripts should be written to be read aloud, and timed for five, ten or fifteen minutes. Talks are normally read at the microphone by their authors, and writers submitting manuscripts may be asked before final acceptance to attend an audition, either in London or in one of the Regional studios. Short stories specially written for broadcasting also considered.

All typewritten manuscripts should be addressed to the Director of Talks, B.B.C., Broadcasting House, London, W.I.

PLAYS

Nearly a thousand plays are broadcast in the course of a year. Many of these are well-known stage plays, but many are written in the first place as radio plays, and by new writers. There is a perpetual demand for new writers who are prepared to take the trouble to learn the technique with the help of certain members of the Drama Department who set aside time for this purpose.

Notes on Radio Drama, including a model synopsis, will be sent on application. Manuscripts must be clearly typed.

All first communications should be addressed to the Play Librarian, Broadcasting House, London, W.I, or to the Drama Producer in any of the Regional studios.

MUSIC

From time to time the B.B.C. commissions works from British composers, and men of the calibre and reputation of Sir Arnold Bax, Master of the King's Musik, Ralph Vaughan Williams and Dr. John Ireland have responded to the invitation.

A Music Panel of distinguished musicians meets regularly to consider the suitability for performance of the large number of MSS. constantly submitted.

VARIETY

New ideas for Variety programmes are constantly sought. Careful consideration is given to all scripts submitted by a panel consisting of the Director of Variety, the Assistant Director and senior producers. The chief requirement is originality; the vast majority of scripts sent in are merely variations of existing programmes.

Typewritten scripts should be addressed to the Director of Variety, Broadcasting House, London, W.I.

CHILDREN'S HOUR

Here again there are numerous opportunities for original material—tales, talks, plays and dialogue stories. Stories for younger children should be approximately 800–1,000 words, and for older children 1,500–2,000 words. Radio plays should be timed, including musical interludes, to last approximately forty-five or fifty minutes. Shorter plays for younger listeners can be timed to run thirty minutes, and the same length for dialogue stories. General matter should be sent to the Children's Hour Director, Broadcasting House, London, W.I, but authors should submit all manuscripts having local interest to B.B.C. Regional offices.

BROADCASTING RIGHTS AND TERMS

Rates of payment vary according to the length of the broadcast.

For material written specially for broadcasting all relevant factors, such as the type of the material, its length, and the status of the author, are taken into consideration when assessing fees.

Payment for specially written stories and plays, whether commissioned or submitted to the B.B.C., is made on acceptance of the material. In the case of music commissioned by the B.B.C. the original score is now returned to the composer at his request and not as in the past automatically retained by the B.B.C.

AUTHORS' AND ARTISTS' AGENTS

MAXIMS FOR WOULD-BE AUTHORS By John Lehmann

HERE are a few maxims for would-be authors which have occurred to me during many years of sad experience as editor and publisher:

1. Produce a typescript that will not be a burden for the editor you are trying to win over to read. Don't ruin his sympathy at the start, for instance, by heavily corrected single-spacing, or, worse still, by showing that you have not even bothered to look the sheets over for crude lapses of typing and punctuation.

2. Don't think you gain anything by adopting a bullying tone in your accompanying letter; e.g., "I shall not be dismayed, Mr. Editor, if you send this back, because I am planning to write a story a week and will send you them all." Weight of bombardment does not win campaigns—in literature.

3. If you want to flatter, then flatter with expert knowledge. Nothing makes a worse impression than to tell an editor you have devoured every book he has written (or edited) and then to reel off a list of someone else's works.

- 4. Don't, in your first approach, send an editor everything you have ever written since your mother bought you a copybook, but make a careful, small selection of what you think your best. Put yourself into a busy editor's shoes as he settles down to his weekly batch of fifty or a hundred contributions, and imagine your own somewhere towards the bottom of the pile.
- 5. Don't, when your manuscript has been rejected, promptly write a long letter back of indignant or sarcastic abuse. Your next contribution may be a good one, but the editor won't, perhaps, be so ready to admit it if you have told him that his own work stinks, anyway, etc., etc.
- 6. If you want to be certain to irritate editors and publishers, then send your manuscript to several at the same time, and when one has accepted it write to all the others and offer alternative works. Not unnaturally, they will feel that their time has been wasted.
- 7. What all this boils down to: editors and publishers are human beings, just like you.

TRENDS IN MODERN DESIGN

NDUSTRIAL design has during the last twenty-five years gradually achieved the recognition which its importance deserves. It is now formally recognised by the State; a special organisation, the Council of Industrial Design, has been set up and sponsored by the Board of Trade. The industrial designer is becoming widely accepted as a trained man, and his place in industry, as a significant and essential technician, is now assured. The literature on the subject is growing, and apart from such excellent American books as "Design This Day," by Walter Dorwin Teague (an eminent American architect and industrial designer), there are many books which deal both with the technical and popular aspects of the subject by English authors. Chief among the popular books is Anthony Bertram's Penguin book entitled "Design." The professional aspects of the subject are covered in "The Industrial Design Consultant," by F. A. Mercer; "The Missing Technician in Industrial Production" and "Self Training for Industrial Designers," by John Gloag. The philosophical and historical aspects are discussed, from quite different points of view, but in great detail, in two books, "Art and Industry," by Dr. Herbert Read, and "Industrial Art Explained," by John Gloag. A comprehensive survey of the condition of industrial design was made in the mid-1930's by Dr. Nikolaus Pevsner, and published under the title of "Industrial Art in England." That book constitutes the best record of English achievements; while a more recent book, the first volume of a bi-annual publication entitled "Designers in Britain," records the individual achievements of contemporary British designers. "Designers in Britain" is the official publication of the Society of Industrial Artists.

Among the more popular recent books, there is one by Alan Jarvis," The Things We See—Indoors and Out," which should be specially mentioned.

Earlier general books on the subject included "Design and a Changing Civilisation," by Noel Carrington; "Design in Daily Life," by Anthony Bertram; "Industrial Design and the Future," by Geoffrey Holme, and "The Conquest of Ugliness," edited by John de la Valette. The whole historical character of the modern movement in design, with particular relation to industry, is dealt with by Dr. Nikolaus Pevsner in his book "Pioneers of the Modern Movement, from William Morris to Walter Gropius."

The modern movement in design is neither a fashion nor a style; it reflects a way of thought, a direct, logical approach to the use of contemporary materials by contemporary industrial methods. To some extent it began as a reaction against the nineteenth-century notion that design was something in the nature of a disguise; something which was "put on" to conceal the hard functional facts, whether the disguise was used for a building, a filing cabinet or a gas stove. To some extent the modern movement in design has become associated with the rather ugly word "functionalism"; but the movement itself begins, where all good design has always begun, by making a building, or a static or mobile object, fit for its purpose. Having established fitness for purpose as a basic principle for design, the trained imagination of the designer, whether he is an architect or an industrial designer, then goes into operation, and his powers of selection and invention ensure that the most agreeable and attractive solution to any problem is secured, and the most appropriate materials employed.

So far as the modern movement in architecture is concerned, we are now seeing the results of the pioneer work of such great British architects as C. F. A. Voysey, and American architects like Frank Lloyd Wright. Architecture is extremely well served with literature, and a few of the outstanding general works on the subject which have appeared within recent years may be given. Of these the following are eminently readable and deal both with the contemporary and historical aspects of the subject:

"Ghastly Good Taste," by John Betjeman.

- "The House-Inside and Out" and "Your House and Mine," by Geoffrey Boumphrey.
- "The Appreciation of Architecture," by Robert Byron.
- "The Process of Architectural Tradition," by W. A. Eden.

" Fine Building," by Maxwell Fry.

- "The Architecture of England," by Frederick Gibberd.
- "The Englishman's Castle," by John Gloag.
- " Style in Architecture," by Julian Leathart. "An Outline of European Architecture," by Nikolaus Pevsner.
- "An Introduction to Modern Architecture," by J. M. Richards.

" Architecture Arising," by Howard Robertson.

" A Key to Modern Architecture," by F. R. S. Yorke and Colin Penn.

Of all writers on architecture, the most outstanding and scholarly is John Summerson, F.S.A., A.R.I.B.A., the Curator of the Sir John Soane Museum. His two best-known works are "Georgian London" and "John Nash." His latest work is "The History of the Architectural Association," published on the occasion of that body's centenary in 1947.

CONCLUSION

WRITERS' SPECIALITIES

An attempt has been made below to list for the convenience of editors and others the subjects in which writers specialize. It is obvious to the compilers themselves that the list is by no means exhaustive; to produce one would require a volume to itself. All that is hoped, is that the following notes may be useful as a preliminary guide on the particular subjects. The Editor would, however, appreciate any information sent to him for use in future editions regarding living writers who are recognized authorities on the subjects mentioned below, and whose names for reasons given in his Foreword may have been omitted from the present edition.
